Street art

Street art is visual art created in public locations, usually unsanctioned artwork executed outside of the context of traditional art venues. Other terms for this type of art can be "urban art", "guerrilla art", "independent public art", "post-graffiti", and "neo-graffiti". Common forms and media can include spray paint graffiti, stencil graffiti, wheatpasted poster art, sticker art, street installations, and sculpture. Video projection and yarn bombing have also gained some popularity near the turn of the 21st century.

Street art or graffiti

Street art is usually painted with permission or commissioned. Graffiti (left) is word-based, whereas Street Art (right) is image-based. “Graffiti art”, if one had to, would be the name Stavsky gives to the two form's artistic overlap. ... Graffiti Art is elaborate and figurative graffiti combined with images.

Cave drawings

The first “Street Art”

As with all great art, they offer insight into the way in which people of that day thought. Although it took place tens of thousands of years ago it gives us some insight into that time period.

Egyptian Reliefs

Street art too??

A relief is a sculpture that is part of a wall or structure. The Egyptians often carved them into the walls of their temples and tombs. Reliefs were generally painted as well. They mostly used the colors blue, black, red, green, and gold in their paintings.

Banksy- is an anonymous England-based street artist, vandal, political activist, and film director. His satirical street art and subversive epigrams combine dark humour with graffiti executed in a distinctive stenciling technique.

More “trademark Banksy” work also appeared at the same time in a nearby street – but it is yet to be claimed by the urban graffiti artist.

It read: "There must be more to life than writing 'There must be more to life' on the walls."

The artist Banksy, who is believed to be from Bristol after starting out his career in the mid-90s, has never released his identity.

Footage has emerged of what looks to be the elusive artist acting shifty while sporting a baseball cap and sunglasses to shield his identity.

Two graffiti artists went on trial in southern China last week charged with “provoking trouble” after an evening of spray painting walls failed to impress the local police.

Sr. Lasso

Sr. Lasso is a Colombian artist based in NYC creating pieces that mixed the realities he has lived around the world. He creates scenes that merge pop culture with street art, camouflaging details that take you into a different reality every time you look at them.

Today in 6th grade Art Enrichment we talked about Street Art. The students created a mural. Ask them what it represented...they got to lead the art...as it should be!!
